diticians of other parties and by experts as auguring ill for the efforts of Premier-designate Ginlio Andreotti to succeed himself Mr. Andreotti, who resigned last Monday after a year and a half in power, is due to start formal negotiations with the Communist party and other political groups. He must attempt to win a careful measure of support from the Communists neither too little nor too much.

Mr. Andreotti's Christian Damocratic party, Italy's strongest political force, has vetoed the in-

Italy's allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, especially the United States, and in the European community have expressed grave misgivings over the prospect of increased Communist influence in Rome.

However, Mr. Andreotti needs the cooperation of the country's second political force—the Communist party represents 34 per cent of the electorate—to be able to win confidence votes in Parliament

The outgoing government, which is carrying on in a caretaker role, was able to function because the Communists in the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate regularly abstained from voting against it on critical is-

Mr. Andreotti appears to be searching for a compromise that would satisfy the Communists by institutionalizing their part in the decision-making process without making them partners in the government.

A possible means of achieving this, it is suggested, would be the appointment of pro-Communist experts to cabinet posts. Another possibility is the crestion of a standing multiparty group, including representatives of the Communist leadership, that periodically would review government activities, functioning like a steering committee. Speakers in today's nationwide Communist propaganda cam-paign, clearly following a directive from Rome headquarters, warned that the party would not accept anything short of direct participation in the next government. The Communist leadership said that it would not yield to "blackmail" in the form of a threat of early elections, in which the Christian Democrats think that they might gain. The impression left by today's speeches was that the Communist party was digging in for a gripped by four overlapping crises whose outcomes will affect the peace and security of nations all along the European coast of the Mediterranean.

The political crisis, the fall last week of Premier Giulio Andreotti and his minority Christian Democratic government, has grabbed the headlines. But the fall of Mr. Andreotti, already engaged in the tortuous process of trying to form a new regime, is a symptom and not a cause of the malaise.

Italians no longer are performing economic miracles. They are wrestling with the worst inflation and highest unemployment of any developed Western country. It was the lengthening jobless queues that brought Communistled workers into the streets in recent weeks and forced the Commonist politicians to withdraw their support from Mr. Andreotti.

Beyond this is an endemic social problem, a governing ma-chinery, dominated by Christian Democrats, that displays vitality only in lavishing state funds on

Trade Concessions

A secret Japanese package of trade concessions proposed at the multilateral trade negotiations in Geneva would reduce tartifs an average of 20 or 25 per cent from present levels on some $10 billion worth of industrial imports, according to Japanese and U.S.

But the proposal reportedly carries few concessions on nontarriff barriers such as the presently stiff commodity taxes, inspection standards and customs control laws, which the sources said might be more important in restricting imports to Japan.

Japan has come under constant fire from the United States and the Common Market in the past year to reduce its growing trade surpluses and open up its mar-ket to foreign imports.

We have people who are said to be disabled with blindness driving buses."

5,000 Terrorists

These linked crises and the attempts to resolve them have parallels in Portugal, Greece and Soam. Whether and how Italy acts will affect them, too.

Despite the gloomy perspective, Italy is a nation of ingenious, flexible people whose capacity to survive and absorb has been displayed for two millennia. ### Praise for Communists

It is just as unnerving to hear Aurelio Peccei, an advisor to multinational corporations, declare: "We are lucky to have this kind of Communist party," and to praise the relatively efficient Communist administration in some towns.

The Communists, the second largest party here, had engaged a remarkable collaboration with Mr. Andreotti that even produced some results in his 17 months in office. Communist smport enabled Mr. Andreotti to impose enough economic restraint to convert a frightening balanceof-payments deficit into a surplus, strengthen the lira and slice six points from a 21-percent inflation rate.

Even more unusual are the close ties between conservative Christian Democrats and the Communists in fighting terror. Ugo Pecchioli, the Communist shadow minister" for these matters, quotes exactly the same position of terrorist groups as the government's interior minister, Francesco Cossiga.

Mr. Pecchioli and Mr. Cossign are sometimes linked in the graffiti the terrorists spray on

Laws Proposed

The Christian Democrats have prepared several laws that will make the prevention and detection of crime easier. But whether or not they are passed a minister sure of the political role accorded to the Communists; after all. they must protect themselves from

This is the mub of the political crisis. The Communists withdrew their support from Mr. Andreotti largely because they were being pushed by their ranks and by smaller, rival groups.

The Communists are insisting on Cabinet posts to win back their support, something no Christian Democrat will concede and something the Communists do not really expect now. Whether they should be given an increased or decreased say in decision-making is the immediate issue.

A group of younger Christian Democrats, about 100 of the 263 deputies, are calling for an end to collaboration with the Communists. This group of hardworking, ambitious men, mostly in their 30s and 40s, is typified by Massimo de Carolis.

Two Solutions'

"In the long run there are only two different solutions," Mr. de Carolis says, "Either agreement with the Communist party or a clash. The first case is the way to arrive at the hegemony of the Communist party. We can't avoid the clash if we don't want to become a Communist

Communists, Socialists Woo Spain Workers

By Stanley Meisler

ALCALA DE HENARES, Spain, Jan 22.-Looking a bit rumpled in a windbreaker, Nicolas Redondo, 50, invokes history and Socialism as he calls on workers to vote for his General Union of Workers in Spain's labor elec-

Ristory and Socialism are what his union can count on most to counter the record of its chief rival, the Communist-dominated Workers' Commissions, which made up the most active and aggressive illegal union in Spain during the long, dictatorial Franco

The labor elections, which began on Jan. 16 and will end on Feb. 6, are complex and confusing. The government of Premier Adolfo Suarez, whose party is the emservative Union of the Democratic Center, is trying to play them down. But they are probably significant for the future of Spain, because they may well decide whether the Socialists or the Communists will control the

Mr. Redondo, who is secretary-general of the Socialist Union, has forecast that the elections "will produce a profound charification of the labor situation." He has also predicted a Socialist victory. But most neutral analysts feel the elections may be too close to cal. Each of the two main unions claims 2 million members. .

Most of the Spanish workers are not voting for a single union to represent them in collective bargaining. Instead, they are choosng representatives for a labor committee that will handle grievances and bargain with the employer. It is assumed that, in the ong run, most workers will tend to join the trade union that instes the labor commuttee of their plant. The strategy and flavor of the election campaign were made clear by the assembly here in Alcala de Henares, a medieval university town 20 miles east of Madrid, which is now surrounded by modern factories.

Several hundred General Union of Workers members crowded into the aged, tiny Cervantes Theater to hear Mr. Redondo, a former metalworker from the northern Basque area, who was introduced simply as "Comrade Nico of the national committee." A man with a soft, full face and a relaxed air. he uses no tricks of oratory in speaking for his union, commonly known by its Spanish initials.

The UGT, the oldest trade union in Spain, was founded by leaders of the Socialist Workers party in 1888 and was the strongest union before the Civil War, Its secretary general, Francisco Largo Caballero, was a premier of the republic during the war-a history with sentimental appeal, and Mr. Redondo reminded his listeners of it.

"We have 100 years of history, he said, rounding his figures, "100 years of experience, years of bar-

Socialist Workers were the second larity of their leaders, the Worklargest party in the parliament Mr. Redondo said, "We in the Cortes can pressure the govern-ment to better the conditions of the working class. There is only one Socialist union, and it is called UGT."

Mr. Redondo has impressive leftist credentials. As Franco's army advanced into the Basque provinces in 1937, he and many other Basque area children were evacuated to France. He was not reunited with his mother until 1940. His father, a Socialist, was imprisoned by Franco from 1937 to 1942. Mr. Redonido himself was jailed numerous times by the Pranco resime for illegal union

Despite Mr. Redondo's credentials, the Socialist union puts the organization shead of personality. And it is obvious why. If the elections were no more than a popularity contest of individuals, the UGT could not match the Com-munist-dominated Workers' Com-

Heroes and Martyrs

The Workers' Commissions produced heroes and martyrs during the Franco years. The secretarygeneral, Marcelino Camacho, who was 60 yesterday, was probably the best-known labor leader in Spain during the dictatorship. He spent more time in Franco's prisons than did Mr. Redondo, and his release after the death of Gen. Franco was halled by leftists throughout the country. The Workers' Commissions, in their election campaign, use posters that feature photographs of the gray-haired Mr. Camacho. The Workers' Commissions came out of informal committees that led illegal strikes in the late 1950s and early 1960s. The Communist party, which actively fought the Franco regime, soon came to dominate these commis-

Two factors account for the strength of the Workers' Commissions today. First, the Communist. party decided to let the commissions take part in the elections for worker representatives on the Fascist-like syndicates set up by the dictatorship. The UCT and other unions boycotted these elec-tions because they looked on the syndicates as phony governmentrun unloss. This was true, but the Workers' Commissions, by taking part in the elections, managed to infiltrate the system and fight for worker rights. : Second, the Communist party. in a mistaken belief that the Franco regime was about to colapse, called the Workers' Commissions out in numerous strikes and demonstrations in the 1960s. This led to the killing of at least 10 workers by the police, the besting of many strikers and demonstrators, and the frequent failing: of leaders like Mr. Camacho: But it also created heroes and mar-

Voting Compromise

As a result, the Workers' Commissions, in the election campaign, can present leaders, who lought for the workers during the Franco era and who suffered for their stand. The commissions stress this personal leadership so much that they refuse to acknowledge that they are as closely linked to the Communist party as the UGT is to the Socialist Workers

To take advantage of the popuers' Commissions wanted voters to choose individual candidates rather than unions. To take advantage of its history and its ties to So cialism, the UGT wanted the workers to vote only for unions. A compromise was reached. Work-ers in all enterprises that have more than 250 employees will vote for individuals. Spain has 8 million salaried workers. Of these, only 6 million are eligible to vote in the elections. The others work in enterprises with five or fewer em-ployees and are expected to deal with their employers directly.

Mr. -Sadat emphasized in his speech that Egypt would press shead with its efforts to achieva an overall Middle East settlement despite the problems he had encountered. While he again accused the Israeli leadership of arrogance, he avoided saying any-Egyptian intransigence.

Instead, he accused the Soviet Union of harming the peace initiative by fanning sentiment against him in the Arab world and referred to Arab hardliners as "Soviet agents." He contrasted the Soviet attitude with the largescale assistance that Egypt has been receiving from the United States, even though, he pointedly noted, that this did not include weapons that were being sent to Israel.

NICOSIA, Jan. 22 (NYT).— Cypriots not to be disappoint While the climate for solving the Cyprus problem seems to be improving - Secretary of State Cyprus. Vance's visits to Ankara and Athens are among the signs-Greeks view recent developments with a mixture of cynicism spawned by past disap-pointments, suspicion that Wash-ington and Ankara may be conspiring, and hope that at last the time for a settlement has

The cynicism and suspicion will be allayed and the hope encouraged if Premier Bulent Ecevit of Turkey produces propossis that are judged substan-tial enough to allow Greek and Turkish Cypriots to resume the talks they began three years

At an earlier session, Greek-Cypriots accepted Turkey's deand for a two-zone federation and submitted a map showing Turkish-Cypriots in control of 20 per cent of the island. Turkish-Cypriots now hold 36 per cent. Instead of responding to this, the Turks then submitted a plan for a constitution with a weak central government, which the Greek side rejected.

Waldhelm Visits When United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim ited Ankara earlier this month, Mr. Reevit promised to submit new proposals on the territorial and constitutional issues. Mr. Waldheim called this "a positive development" because it was the first time the Turkish side had agreed to offer a proposal on territory, including a map outlining the two zones. He was encouraged in Cyprus when he managed to bring together Spyros Kyprianou, the President of Cyprus, and Rauf Denktash, the leader of Turkish-Cypriots, for the first time in more than a year. They agreed to have Mr. Waldhelm judge whether Mr. Ecevit's proposals were substantive enough to resume talks. Mr. Waldheim then flew to Athens, where Premier Constantine Caramanlis welcomed his initiatives but added a qualification that Mr. Ecevit's proposals should be not only concrete enough to allow for new negotia-

Eastern U.S. Digging Out After Storm

NEW YORK, Jan. 23 (AP).— The U.S. Northeast yesterday dug out from its worst hissard in nine years—a storm that was not supposed to happen, according to the weathermen. At least 25 persons died, many from heart attacks as a result of shoveling snow. The snow, driven by winds of up to 50 miles an hour, was dumped on the Northeast Friday, only hours after forecasters had said that only a few inches would fall and be washed away by rain,

Massachusetts recorded 21 inches in the blizzard; Rhode Island and Connecticut got up to 17; New York and New Jersey had 12 to 14 inches; Pennsylvania, Maryland and West Virginia had 8 to 13 inches. Ohio, Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee got up to 8 inches of snow. In New York City weathermen admitted that they had been

U.S. Attorney in Philadelphia Quits in Showdown On Probe

By George Lardner Jr. WASHINGTON, Jan. 22 (WP). -U.S. Attorney David Marston cí Philadelphia, who has been pressing investigations of official corruption involving Democratic officeholders, has been ousted in a showdown with Attorney Gen-

The Attorney General, in statement, said that Mr. Marston had "refused my request" to remain at his post until "when and if a suitable replacement could be found."

Mr. Marston said that this would have crippled his investi-gations, including one into the construction of a $65-million addition to Philadelphia's Hahnemann Hospital. So it was a hard fromy when the 33-year-old black journalist became both the victim and the reporter in a Berkeley rape story last week, a story she chose to make public.

The striking, almond-eyed daughter of Chicago's presiding Juvenile Court judge, William White, Miss Craven was an early civil-rights activist. Following a year in New York writing for ABC Network News in 1970, she became a regular on "Newsroom," a distinguished local news show on San Francisco public tele-

The State of Mr. Carter's Country

The state of our union, says Jimmy Carter, is sound. Not because Jimmy Carter has been President for a year, but because the American people are confident, hard-working, decent and compassionate, and because their economy and military establishment stand strong. Now that the boys are home from Vietnam and the zealots are out of the White House, he concludes, there is no great cause or crisis to divide us, or to invest our leaders with heroic mandates. So this is the time to oil the machine of government and to replace some malfunctioning parts, to tend to some unfinished business and to prepare for the foreseeable future so that no new crisis will overwhelm us. Not a bad reading, we suspect, of the American mind. * * *

But that is not the way Jimmy Carter would have spoken if Gerry Ford had delivered the same message—as well he might have. A Carte - still reaching for the White House would have complained of a smug and bankrupt administration letting the nationslumber while dangers threaten. Inflation and unemployment at intolerable levels continue to sap our productive power. The delay even of a modest energy program undermines the nation's economy and security. Huge numbers of Americans remain excluded from the general prosperity, abandoned in deteriorating cities. Feeble arms control agreements have undermined rather than enhanced diplomatic stability without diminishing the burdensome costs of weapons. The industrial West's economy lies in deep recession with no prospect of revival. A stingy America is doing little for the struggling peoples in the rest of the world. This, too, is fair comment on the state of our

Jimmy Carter knows both scripts. He hears both the silent majority and the smothered minority. From the majority he seeks not sacrifice, or even vision, but prudence. From the minority he seeks patience while further relief, though hardly remedy.

The President's common sense and sensitivity have been his most admirable qualitles over his first year. That is why he well understands the differences between his time, so far, and Lincoln's or FDR's. Be grateful I'm not a hero, he tells us-because heroic presidents are from crisis born. He understands, as well, that he threw too much reform and revival at Congress last year. The dangers and inequities so obvious to Jimmy Carter were not at all obvious to the country. Once elected, he overestimated his own triumph at the spolls and underestimated the do-little appeal of his predecessor. So Jimmy Carter has made his adjustments.

A compromised energy program, he now assures us, will be enough. Massive tax reform can yield to a modest tax reduction, barely large enough to compensate for the tax increases in Social Security and energy. Welfare reform-and welfare recipients-will have to wait. Health insurance must be delayed. The military budget cannot be contained. Let's at least avoid a brawl over the Panama Canal treaties—which affect so few of us anyway. The rest of the world is being tended, but with no evident conviction that Americans care or need care much about it. (Is it really possible to discuss the state of our union without discussing the state of Saudi Arabia?)

This President, alas, knows us too well. Having tried, however ineptly, to rouse the mation only to be kicked for the effort, he invites us now to slumber on soundly but to let conscience stir our dreams. He is a soothing flatterer and a sensible President, but not yet a leader, or teacher, even for a

Judging the FBI

Some Monday soon, the top brass of the Justice Department will gather for its weekly staff lunch. Someone will say "Judge," and three heads will turn. Attorney General Bell is a former federal appeals court judge. So is Solic.tor General Wade McCree. And so is William Webster, the administration's new choice to be director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The fact prompts a lawyer friend to raise a question. Without meaning the slightest criticism of Judge Webster, he asks: Is it healthy for the administration so frequently to raid the federal judiciary for executive-branch appointments?

It's a fair question. The separation of the branches of government is a principle of constitutional importance. And the tradition of regarding federal judges as a bit cloistered strengthens public respect for courts and, hence, for the rule of law. It hardly enhanced that respect when, in the Nixon years, a federal judge was courted for the FBI position while presiding over a case related to the Pentagon papers. Beyond such specific tawdriness, there is a more general, atmospheric consideration. For such past giants of the federal appellate bench as, say, Learned Hand, to have accepted executive office in any circumstance is unimaginable. That judges now seem regularly willing to do so suggests a general erosion in the image and stature of the judiciary. Our lawyer friend is right to feel uneasy. * * *

Nevertheless, at least on brief acquaintance with Judge Webster's qualifications, we think Judge Bell was justified, indeed wise, to propose him as FBI director. While the executive and judicial branches alike should, generally, resist use of the federal bench as a talent pool, the circumstances here are exceptional.

"Snake-bit"-that's what the attorney general recently called the long, frustrating task of finding a successor to Clarence Kelley. First, the administration had to learn for itself that formal search committees rarely produce excellent candidatesand meanwhile, months had gone by. Then, in August, jackpot! The choice of another federal judge, Frank Johnson, brought universal acclaim—but then he had to step aside for health reasons. That left the problem tougher, if anything, than before. Now it was not enough simply to find someone with experience, dignity and devotion to . law-it had to be someone the public would recognize as having those virtues. It was reasonable on that ground alone for the attorney general to look yet again to the federal judiciary.

There is, however, a more fundamental justification for selecting a man like Judge Webster, experie: ... as a prosecutor and a lawyer and so well regarded as a judge that he was once considered for the Supreme Court. Respect for the law must embrace respect for law enforcemen: as well as for judges-and we live in a time of severely diminished respect for the FSI.

Disclosures of sordid, even illegal past activities continue to corrode the stature of an agency which, not so many years ago, epitomized stern, professional and fair law enforcement. Judge Webster's task will be not merely to administer the FBI but to rebuild it, its morale and its public reputation, proceeding from reforms conscientiously begun by Clarence Kelley

The Senate, surely, will examine him and his qualifications painstakingly. The task may be easier because he is a judge-investigation can go beyond what his friends and neighbors say to a large body of opinions reflecting his values and views. * * *

Once confirmed, he would, within days, have to turn urgently to the development of a charter for the bureau's activities, making law instead of the discretion of fallible officials determine the limits of FBI activities. Before many more days pass, it is to be hoped that Director Webster would begin articulating a larger, modern agenda for the bureau. The preoccupation, in the J. Edgar Hoover days, with spies, bank robbers and car thieves—even if once justified—no longer suffices. The nation needs the energies of a proud FBI in combat against white-collar crime, public corruption, organized crime and its infiltration of legitimate business.

* * * In all this, the public should be able to draw confidence from the devotion to law that Judge Webster's record demonstrates. Let there be a certain confusion about which judge is being addressed at the Justice Department lunches-for years at a time, J. Edgar Hoover didn't bother to attend them at all. When it comes to reviving-and controlling-the FBI, better too many judges than too few.

WASHINGTON.—As a general rule in this city, nothing is ever quite as good or as bad as the prevailing mood of the moment. This is Murphy's Second. Law, and the wild swings of opinion on the Middle East sug-gest that Murphy had a point. The excessive hopes about the Sadat-Begin talks have been followed, as usual, by excessive fears. Suddenly, everything that before Christmas is now being denounced as "terrible," and even Henry Klasinger, an old buddy of Murphy, is recom-mending that we keep our shirts

What has broken down to the Middle Fast is not "the talks" but the talking. The negotiations haven't ended; they haven't really started. Sadat and Begin haven't falled, but their Super Bowl diplomacy, with TV cam-cras and instant replays in every dining room and locker room. has failed, and there is now a pause for reflection.

Governments' Role

So the question now is what the Israeli and Egyptian governments, and the U.S. government —not just Begin, Sadet and Vance—are going to do with the pause. This is now under serious discussion and even dispute here.

The prevailing view within the that Washington must use its influence on both sides to keep the "momentum" going. But there enother view here that everybody is dizzy with "momentum," and maybe what the situation requires is a few days or even weeks of serious private negotia-tion, and, if possible, a moratorkum on public pronouncements. Since neither side is ready to "put np," according to this view, at least they should be willing to "shut up" and let everybody think before they begin talking again.

Washington needs this pause almost as much as Jerusalem and Cairo do. There is disagreement here about what Secretary of State Vance's role should be after his recent mission in the Middle East. Some officials are arguing that this is a moment in the crisis between Begin and Sadat for the United States to keep intervening and defining the Carter administration's recommendations for a compromise.

Others are insisting that the United States should stand aside for a while and not try to get short-range compromises, but let Begin and Sadat consider the consequences of their disagree-

Clean Slate for Carter -At Least Temporarily

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON —January is the President's month in Washington and in national politics, It is the month when he can wipe the slate clean, at least temporarily, of the frustrations and disappointments of the past 12 months and regain the policy

The formal occasions of the month all showcase his program for the future, embodied in the State of the Union address, the economic message, the budget.

The spotlight is on the President, but it shows him, this year, precariously balanced on a high-wire of economic decision-making, where any major miscalculation could bring a very long fall.

Right Choice

In one sense, Carter has already made the right choice by tocusing in these highly publicized messages on the pocketbook issues economic growth and governmental finance. These issues are not only substantively the most important but are uppermost in the minds of the voters in this election year.

But concentrating on the right issues and dealing with them effectively are two different things. And the spotlight illuminates not only the presidential initiatives but the tough problems President Carter faces in his second year.

First, he has to find a way to persuade Congress and the country to take steps that have imdiate costs, in order to ward off future problems.

He has been unable to do that so far with the energy issue. His energy program, if approved, would raise prices and taxes at once, and inconvenience many consumers and businesses. The energy crunch it is designed to ease is still some years distant. To date, Carter has not been able to sell his insurance policy against a future energy crisis; the price

Out of Gas

Now he faces a similar chal-lenge with his tax-cut proposals. The economy is performing nicely, just now, with unemployment coming down and production going up. But Carter's economic dylsers tell him the "drag" of higher Social Security taxes, lagging investment, trade deficits, and the inflation-fed movement of most families into higher income-tax brackets will cause the economy to run out of gas some time within the next year.

That makes an income-tax cut advisable. But the tax cut is not popular with those who want rising federal revenues used either to reduce the budget deficit or to pay for bigger domestic programs. So, as with energy, the President must make the case for exerticing something now in order to forestall future proble Second, the spotlight shows Carter making extremely painful choices between attractive but conflicting current goals. At the same time that he wants to provide added stimulus to the economy, he wants to guard against feeding the skeady strong forces of inflation. The size of the tax cut and the size of the budgeted spending figure represent uneasy efforts to strike a balance between those goals. But just because they are compromises, they inevitably beby those who would put all thebemphasis on job-creating stimulus and by those who would sacrifice everything to curb inflation.

Even within the area of antiinflation policy, Carter faced a hard choice. A program with "teeth," specific guidelines for wage-price increases backed by a comprehensive government monitoring system and the threat of "jawboning," would have alarmed the very business leaders he is trying to persuade to take invest. ment risks.

But a program lacking such "teeth" is sure to be depicted as no more than a tissue-paper barricade to the tiger of inflation The resulting compromise-reject ing guidelines or fawboning and instead relying on voluntary "standards of behavior" related to the past wage-and-prine patterns in each industry—becomes the target of the same crossire of criticism, from both sides, as the tax and budget decisions,

Cruelest Dilemma Finally, the cruelest dilemms of all tovolves the effort to square the prudent policy choices of today with the promises of the 1978 campaign. Carter is burying those promises at a pretty rapid rate and this week he writes off one that he really hates to concerthe pledge to balance the budget by the end of his first term. In real-world terms, it is an honest acknowledgment of painful realities to say a balance budget cannot be achieved on the promised timetable without incurring unacceptable costs in terms of stunted economic growth and increasing tax burdens. But frontcally, that honest admission can weaken the President's publi credibility, when it is measure against the improdent and oftrepeated promises of the previous presidential campaign.

So, other politicians can contain their envy of Carter's hogging the spotlight with his speeches an messages this week, Sometime the spotlight just lets you see he

MOSCOW, Jan. 22 (NYT).-Six Jewish scientists who have been denied permission to emigrate to Israel have written to President Carter expressing concern over what they believe is a tendency in the United States to interpret a recent increase in emigration as a liberalization of

"Unfortunately," they wrote in the letter which was given to Western correspondents yesterday, "there are no signs so far of a change in the emigration policy of the USSR, and during the last year the persecution of Jews wishing to leave the U.S.S.R. has been especially intensified."

In the last months of 1977, more persons were issued emigration visas than in the earlier months, although the number remains far below the 34,922 who were allowed to go in 1973. Subsequent figures were 20,181 in 1974, 12,189 in 1975 and 14,138 in 1976. Figures for last year are freer Soviet emigration policy. The six scientists took strong sue with statements they had heard reported on Voice of

Eastman Kodak Is Convicted Of Monopolistic Practices

NEW YORK, Jan. 22 (NYT),-Tha Eastman . Kodak Co., the world's largest manufacturer of photographic products, has been found by a jury in Federal District Court in Manhattan to have used its technological dominance to monopolize much of the amateur photographic business.

In returning the verdict yesterin a $300-million civil action. filed against the company by Berkey Photos, Inc.—the jurors found that Kodak, with yearly sales of $6 billion, monopolised various segments of ameteur photography. As a result, the jury found Kodak damaged Berkey, which has sales of less than $200 million a year.

Walter A. Fallon Kodak's chairman and chief executive of-ficer, said in a statement issued company headquarters late Saturday afternoon that Kodak would appeal the jury's decision. We believe that the court applied an incorrect standard of law

The panel also ruled that Kodak received excessive benefits from its cooperation with the General Electric Co. and the Sylvania Co. in developing flip-flash units for its pocket cameras:

Although the jury ruled that Kodak had monopolized these markets, it answered "no" to questions about whether Berkey had proved its charges that Kodak "unlawfully attempted to monop-olize the market" in color print paper, amateur movie cameras and photofinishing.

Judge Marvin Frankel, who presided over the seven-month trial, described as one of the most complex and contentious in the history of photography, ordered the jurors to return to court on Feb. 21 for trial of the damages against Kodak. The judge said he expected that trial to last two or three weeks.

their discussions and to which they were to answer yes or no. John Doar, Kodak's chief lawyer, said he believed that the trial represented the first time a jury had been called upon to judge the conduct of a major corporation. Kodak had requested the jury trial, but may now appeal on the grounds that, besues involved, the case should never have gone to trial.

Mr. Doar indicated he was pusaled by an affirmative answer by the jurars to one of the questions and a negative answer to another.

The jurors answered "yes" to the question: "Has Berkey proved its charge that Kodak monopolized the market it alleges in color print paper to the injury of Berkey in its business or property?"

Yet they answered "no" to the question: "Has Berkey proved its charge that Kodak unlawfully attempted to menopolize the market in color print paper?"

Judge Frankel said he had read over the answers before announcing the verdict and said he had found them to be "consistent, rational and logically arrived at."

The trial was the first of four anti-trust complaints filed against Kodak in 1973, the year after it introduced its revolutionary Instamatic pocket cameras with new film size and chemistry. One of the complaints, brought

Bell & Howell, was settled out of court in 1974, providing for prior disclosure by Kodak before introducing new films that could significantly affect producers of movie cameras or processing of film-the business Berkey concentrated on.

The two remaining lawsuits, filed by the GAF Corp. and the Pavelle Corp., had awaited the outcome of the Berkey suit. Since filting their law suits. GAF and Berkey have gotten out of the small camera and film business

The cargo ship Progress-1 launched on Friday, took fuel, scientific equipment and suppplies to the spacemen whe watched it dock with the Salyut-6 station, Tass said.

Progress-1, guided by ground ntrol stations, has been efficially termed the "brother" of the Soyuz manned vehicles used in Soviet space exploration. Soyuz-27, in which the two cosmonants are expected to return to earth, is docked at the other end of anything had gone wrong. The location, approach, tethering and final locking operations were executed by radio and computer devices on Frogress-1. Existence of the new spacecraft was kept secret until its launching. The new craft, said the newspaper Prayda, is as essential to the future of space exploration as the Soyuz. Tass also revealed that it was not designed to return to earth.

When its cargo has been unloaded a process that began soon after the docking-it will be detached from the Salyut station and sent back into the earth's atmosphere to burn up.

Tass said that this was aimed at cutting costs and increasing possibilities for delivering supplies to orbiting space stations, which has been tha focus of the Soviet space program since the United States won the race to the moon almost a decade ago. Col. Romanenko and Mr. Grechko also will use Progress-1 as a

Japanese-Americans Finding Success Spurs New Problems

By Robert C. Toth

WASHINGTON -Despite great odds. Japanese-Americans have become the most successful racia! minority in U.S. history. Even in a country whose patron saint is the Horatio Alger hero." wrote sociologist William Petersen, "there is no parallel to this

Like hlacks, they suffered racial prejudice. Like Jews, they were denigrated and feared as superefficient competitors. Yet now they have, on average, more education than whites, nearly as high incomes, stabler marriages, and about twice as many professionals as the total U.S. popula-

But has success dispersed the ethnic community and its ties. eroding the very circumstances that made Japanese-Americans a "super minority"? What has Americans, another sociologist, Dr. Darrel Montero of the University of Maryland, asked in a recent study.

One traditional Japanese-American mother, watching her children in a Japanese version of the "Flower Drum Song," is said to have remarked: "I feel like a chicken that hatched a duck's eggs."

"The prognosis for maintenance of the community is not good," Dr. Montero concluded in ..

Many Japanese-Americans, on the other hand, are not inclined to dwell on bow far they have come, focusing instead on how to go further—to end remaining discrimination and expand the areas of their success. The Japanese-American Citizens League. for example, complains about the success stereotype."

'Made It'

"There is the perception by 'decision makers' here that we've made it," said JACL representative Wayne Horiochi, "but it's relative, spotty. We're underagement, among other places. The Justice Department in its Bakke Brief [the court case in which racial quotas at California universities are being challenged] questioned whether we should have a special preference because of the high number of Asian-Americans already in medical schools. But we are very underrepresented in law schools and business schools, places where the Bakke decision will also have a big impact," Mr. Horiuchi said in an interview.

Anthropologists identify nine

"geographical" races. There are three brimary ones-Caucasian or white, Asian or Mongoloid, and Negro or black-and six "local" races—American Indian Australoid, Indic, Micronesian. Melanesian, and Polynesian—that probably once were, but no longer are, genetically related to the main races. American Indiana. among others, stemmed from Asians, for example.

Rather than having a problem with success. Prof. Petersen, now at Ohio State University, wrote that Japanese-Americans should have become a "problem minority"-with poor health, low education, low income, high crime rates, unstable familier - Lause of their history of discrimination and unjust treatment.

Growth of Minority

Inter-marriage was once barred by law in some states, and at times there were 25 men to every woman in Japanese communities. Until 1952 Japanese immigrants could not be naturalized, Prof Petersen wrote, and as non-citizens were legally unable to own farm land or become licensed to practice in many professions. During World War II, some 110,000 were interned. and their properties confiscated, as agents of an overseas enemy. From only 148 Japanese-Americans in 1880, the population grew to 292,000 on the continen-tal United States in 1970, with almost 300,000 more in Hawaii. Three-fourths of those on the continent live on the West Coast, overwhelmingly in California. Los Angeles is the "capital of Japanese-America," with 38 per cent of the continental population (representing :15 per cent of the city's population).

Three U.S. senators are Japanese-Americans—Daniel Inouye and Spark Matsunaga of Hawaii, and S.I. Hayakawa of California as is a Californian .. in the House of Representatives-Norman Mineta of San Jose. Chinese are the second biggest Asian population in the United States (431.00) bot have no congressional representatives.

The levels of schievement of Japanese-Americans in socioeconomic terms have been strik-Their median education is 12.5 years, compared to 12.1 for s, 13.4 for Chinese and 9.8 for blacks. The average family income is $10,689 annually, only bit under the white average of $10.922. In fact, income for native-born Japanese-American heads of families is $11,830, or higher than for whites (figures for 1973). Ten per cent of the U.S. population is composed of professional people—but 19 per cent of Japanese-Americans are professionals.

Land Acquisition

The self-help organizations enabled Japanese-Americans to get land (sometimes by using illegal fronts) or set up small busi-nesses, even though they were very poor, by pooling community resources. A high degree of morality, of honesty was needed since there was no resort to courts to force lenders to repay loans and other he'n.

Sociologist Ivan Light, Dr. Petersen said, compared Japanese and Chinese-Americans, and also native U.S. blacks and West Indian blacks. He found that the Japanese, Chinese and West Indiana were successful in pulling themselves up by their boot straps and overcoming discrimination primarily because of selfhelp groups that meant each person was not operating alone in a hostile society. Of the three, the Japanese-Americans were most successful.

Community control mecha nisms were more strict than the law, Two Japanese-American teen-agers who robbed a radio

"Japanese-American newspapers printed the names and offenses of members of the community who got divorces, were nicked up as drunks, and so forth, in the 1920s and - 1930s," Prof. Petersen continued. "The shame felt was enormous. And if the individual could not be shamed his fare was paid back to Japan by the community."

This community, in geographic as well as socio-ethnic respects, ems to be on the way toward disintegrating, however.

Dr. Montero, analyzing data on 2,304 second-generation (nisel) and 802 third-generation (sansei) Japanese-Americans col-lected in an earlier University of California at Los Angeles project, reported in a paper to the American Sociological Association

Smaller Underwriters Are Finding Participation Is More Expensive

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS, Jan 22 (IHT).—Doing 10-year paper and six points on business in the Euromarket increasingly is becoming a hardball game: The big banks that, as lead managers, can call the tune are striving for what they onelism while the horde of smaller banks that traditionally constitute an underwriting syndicate are finding that participation is becoming more expensive than ever before. The lead managers have long argued that underwriters are paid up to a half-point commi for the portion of an issue they take down and that the commission is recompense for the risk they undertake. If there were no risks there ought to be no underwriting fee and if the risk occasionally means an underwriter loses money, that is what the business is all about.

With between $60 million and $80 million paid out in underwriting commissions last year (between three-eighths to onehalf per cent on some $18 billion of new business), argues a top ecutive of one leading issuing house, "underwriters have no cause for complaint" about the "oceasional" issua that opens trading at a steep discount and may represent a real loss. The smaller banks argue that they are willing to assume the underwriting risk but on condition that the lead manager prices a new issue realistically.

At present, the banks are in an uproar over the recent $200million issue for the European Investment Bank, divided equally into 10-year, 8 1/2-per-cent notes and 15-year, 8 3/4-per-cent bonds, both issued at 99 1/2.

CHICAGO, Jan. 22 (AP-DJ).—Soybean traders were caught by surprise last week when the U.S. government reported that a huge 1.72 billion bushels of beans were harvested in 1977. Soybean futures plunged to their lowest prices since late October.

"Everyone figured the (soybean) harvest would be less than the Agriculture Department predicted last November," a market analyst said. "The bad weather since then should have reduced the yield." But instead of a lower figure, the government raised its latest estimate of soybean production by nearly 2 per cent. That represented almost 50 million more bushels than market participants had

The January soybean contract, which sold above $6 a bushel the preceding week, had slumped to $5.57 by the time it expired on Friday. Soybeans for delivery through the summer, when the

"Disciplining the underwriting syndicate is fine," says one emaged Continental banker, "but then the lead manager must start out with conditions that are acceptable to the market,"

UBS can rightfully argue that any underwriter who did not like the terms could have pulled out of the syndicate once the final conditions were set. But until now banks have been loath to do this, out of fear of offending either the borrower or the lead bank with whom the underwriter wants to continue to do business.

"There is a crude logic to the UBS approach." says a U.K. banker, who agrees that banks which join a syndicate but have no intention of trying to place the bonds are a constant problem. But he diragrees with the UBS method of "cracking the

Drop in Pells

Before the President went to Congress to present his goals for the coming year, the latest poll by The New York Times and CBS News showed that public confidence in his ability to handle the nation's huge unemployment, inflation and budget problems had dropped to new lows.

They also would applaud the President's pledge to hold down government spending, his statements about the damage of continuing inflation, his renewed disavowal of mandatory wage and price controls and his recognition of the need to limit enlargement of the administrathe role of the government in economie affairs.

"The government," the President said in his Thursday night address to Congress, "can't be the manager of everything and

Since those were well known beforehand, as were his views or the need for his energy program there were questions whether the financial market would perceive the President's messages as evi dence of a well coordinated econemic plan that would remove the uncertainties that have di minished confidence in the ad ministration's policies.

Several recent surveys of consumer and business confidence buying intentions for new cars homes and appliances, and the operations plans of various industries showed a decidedly mixed trend. The varying character of the survey results was a major reason for confusion and uncertainty about this year's general business prospects.

The most gloomy of the sound-ings from the public came two weeks ago when the highly respected survey of consumer attitudes by the University of Michigan detected a sharp drop in the public's confidence and purchase plans,

A profitable partnership between finance & trading.

A profitable formula from Lloyds and Scottish

In 1977 Lloyds and Scottish Limited produced record pre-tax profits of £17.4 million, with turnover and dividends also up on the previous year.

Which is particularly good news in a year when interest rates were volatile and the economy remained sluggish.

These results are yet another vindication of our policy of well planned diversification.

Buying an interest, to secure our interests

For some years Lloyds and Scottish have not only pursued a policy of forming joint companies or partnerships to promote traditional financial activities, but we have also acquired companies whose trading operations create a captive financial market to which financial services are ancillary.

For instance, we formed joint venture companies to participate in car financing and other forms of consumer finance while acquiring companies in earthmoving equipment, television rentals and invoice factoring.

Just how successful this policy has been can be judged from the fact that our industrial and trading activities accounted for £L3 million of last year's £2.9 million increase in profit.

The companies acquired or formed in 1977 included Wheelbase & General Finance and Mann & Overton - the leading supplier of taxicabs in the U.K. Both are already contributing to the overall strength of the Group.

Management philosophy

One reason why these policies have worked so well is that the relationship between finance and trading is always well balanced and realistic.

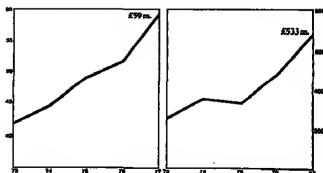

While working within clear-cut policy guidelines, subsidiary companies benefit from a high degree of management autonomy - but the performance of each subsidiary is assessed against strict financial vardsticks.

This professional attitude to our internal arrangements keeps up the profits of our finance companies, and our trading companies efficient.

Strength to strength

And it works.

It is stability plus performance that really counts. Our financial strength is demonstrated by the fact that our borrowings increased during the year by £70 million and our gross assets by £100 million to £533 million. Share capital and reserves have increased by £7.4 million to £59.0 million.

Capital and Reserves in £ millions Gross Assets in £ millions

These factors mean that in the coming year we should be able to continue along our path of proven success. If you would like a more detailed account of our performance. please write to the Secretary for a copy of the 1977 Annual Report, Lloyds and Scottish Limited, Vigo House, 115 Regent Street, London WIA 3DD.

CARGOVEYOR

Our new automated, continuous CARGOVEYOR systems—with their unique, reversible, spiral conveyors and multidirectional 360° telescopic feeders—will revolutionize the unloading (and loading) of begs, cartons and boxes at ports around the world. Turnaround time will be cut to a minimum. Cargo demage and contamination associated with treditionel handling operation will also be significantly reduced.

CARGOVEYOR systems can be economically added to existing port facilities. Even greater benefits will be gained in the developing countries.

Our new self-contained, jack-up pontoon CARGOVEYOR system, complete with its own power plant, can be towed and set up any place in the world. Port congestion will be relieved with excessive demurrage charges practically eliminated.

Designed and developed through the talent and effort of three companies with a combined experience of over 250 years in marine and industrial material hendling (Ammeraal Nederland BV, BV Machinefabriek Figee and Hewitt-Robins Internetional Inc., a Litton Industries, Inc., subsidiary), these CARGOVEYOR systems will be marketed worldwide by Hewitt-Robins International Inc. As an experienced multi-national organization, we have the ability to organize financial packages utilizing governmental and commercial financing organizations.

Our management team has proven expertise in plenning and handling large turn-key projects including complete terminal facilities. We invite you to call or write for detailed information on this revolutionary breakthrough in marine material handling technology.

It is rare that a borrower taps the same market within a few weeks of itself, or that a borrower changes lead manager and does not even invite the former lead manager into the new managing syndicate, or that the bornower would bring a new issue 2t 2 time when the lead manager of the former issue was still in the process of trying to stabilize the secondary-market price of that issue.

Implicitly, it appears that CSWW is having its knuckles rapped for having turned down joining the EIB dollar loan. The new loan is $25 million of

Pressure Seen On Sales of Iranian Crude

LONDON, Jan. 23 (AP-DJ).-Sales of Iranian crude oil in Western Europe, which sagged during 1977, are seen coming under further pressure this year following Kuwait's decision to extend a 10-cent-a-barrel rebate that it began last year.

Kuwait's decision to continue this incentive to buyers of its heavy crude (IHT, Jan. 18) was taken in light of the current oil chasers that Kuwaiti oil was overpriced relative to comparable Saudi Arabian grades.

Oil sources here claim that Iran's prices are even more out of line with the market. This, coupled with the availability of Saudi crudes and oil from the North Sea, has depressed purchases of Iranian oil, they say.

Spokesmen here for the National Iranian Oil Co. and the Iranian oil participants group, through which U.K. oil comnanies purchase Franian crude, declined to comment.

According to the latest International Energy Agency statis-tics, Iranian oil imports by countries in the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development fell 20.5 per cent in the third quarter compared with the year-earlier period to 41.6 million tons. By comparison, Saudi Arabian shipments declined 5.6 per cent to 79.1 million tons.

Figures for France, West Ger-many and Britain indicate the trend continued into the fourth

The Kuwaiti decision to retain its 10-cent-a-barrel rebate puts its net price at $12.27 a barrel for medium grade. In contrast, Iranian heavy oil is priced at $12.49 a barrel. "Tranian heavy is a big problem," one London oil analyst said, "One solution would be a price cut," he added.

In the deutsche mark sector, the flow of new issues remained heavy but the market showed no signs of strain, Brazil's 150-million-DM loan was increased to 200 million DM and was priced at per with a coupon of 8 3/4 per cent.

Denmark's 200 million DM, split evenly into seven-year, 5 1/4per-cent and 10-year, 6-per-cent paper, were both priced at 99 1/2. In the secondary market, Brazil was trading at per while the Danish paper traded at slight

$8.2 Billion in Reflows for Eurobond Mart

PARIS, Jan. 22 (IHT) .-- An estimated $3.2 billion will be available for investment in the Enrobond market this year from interest and principal repayments on issues already outstanding.

The estimate comes from Orion Bank which has issued studies estimating the size of funds reflows into the Eurobond market over the past two years. The latest study is updated to include all of last year's new issues and, as well, a broader base of Swiss franc and deutsche mark private placements than used in earlier analyses

Included are bonds denominated in dollars, DM, guilders, French and Swiss france, Units of Account to all 2.732 issues with a face value of $86.2 billion calculated at end-1977 exchange rates,

The study notes that of this year's total funds reflows only 38 per cent represents principal repayments, By 1982, however, 73 per cent of the estimated $13.4 billion available for flowing back into the market will represent principal repayments.

While no one can say how much of this money will actually be

Cornfeld Asks Swiss To Cancel His Trial

GENEVA, Jan. 22 (Renters),-Lawyers for U.S. financier Bernard Cornfeld have asked a court here to drop charges that he swindled investors in his former mutual-funds empire, Investors Overseas Services, out of millions of dollars. They said he had acted in good falth and his investors had faced normal risks. The Swiss lawyers asked the Geneva Appeals Court to reverse a decision by a criminal court here last June that Mr. Cornfeld, 50, must face a jury trial on fraud charges. The financier has been free on bail from a Swiss court since 1974 and now lives in Hollywood. Swiss law did not require his presence in court last week, and he was absent.

For this year, reflows will total an estimated $2.27 billion in the first quarter, $2.07 billion in the second quarter, $1.76 billion in the third quarter and $2.1 billion in the final quarter. On a monthly basis, March ($838 million), July ($818 million) and December ($792 million) will experience the heaviest reflows.

Westinghouse Probed by U.S.

NEW YORK, Jan. 22 (NYT),-The Westinghouse Electric Corp. has said that the Justice Department and the Securities and Exchange Commission are investigating its controversial contract to build a nuclear power plant in the Philippines.

The company said that it had been informed last week that the Justice Department's inquiry was being conducted by a special task force, directed by the agency's Criminal Division, that was created last year to examine questionable corporate payments. Westinghouse was awarded the contract, involving a $1.1-billion nuclear plant, by the government of President Perdinand Marcos in 1974. Westinghouse has admitted having paid a commission to a company owned by a friend of Mr. Marcos assistance in obtaining the contract. Bankers familiar with the contract have put the contmission figure anywhere between $4 million and $35 million.

Confidence Off

Among businessmen, the sentiments in the polls were not very upbeat at all. In its quarterly survey of more than 1,500 chief executive officers of companies of various sizes, the Conference Board found its measure of business confidence in the general economic outlook falling sharply in the final quarter of last year. The index dropped to 52 from 59 in the third quarter and from 71 in the second quarter of last year. With respect to their own industries, however, the executives exhibited a much smaller decline in confidence.

The latest survey of businessmen's expectations conducted among more than 1,400 leaders manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing by Dun & Bradstreet Inc. was neutral. It showed them looking for little change in the first quarter of 1978 from the preceding quarter with re-spect to sales, inventories and employment, while their profit predictions took a gloomier turn.

Despite the mixed character of the consumer and business surveys and the continued depressed state of the stock market, the latest cews from the real world of business and the economy was good overall. It showed that the old year ended on a strong note. in contrast to the weakness that was evident 12 months earlier.

In real terms (subtracting the influence of inflation) the Gross National Product of the United States advanced at a fairly healthy rate of 4.3 per cent in the final three months of last year, in contrast to the small gain at an annual rate of 12 per cent in the closing quarter of 1976. When the actual December figures are available for inventories and the nation's foreign trade, there will be revisions in the fourth-quarter GNP statistics for last year—and they might well push the gain upward.

Final Sales

What was most encouraging about the economic performance in the final quarter of last year and indeed throughout 1977

Flu Threat Seen in U.S. Britain and Philippines

ATLANTA, Jan. 22 (UPI).-Influenza has killed 465 more persons then expected this year in the United States, and federal health officials report the new flu strain that swept the Soviet Union has now spread to Britain and the Phillipines.

The Center for Disease Control said influenza deaths reported for the first two weeks of January from 121 cities in the United States exceeded the "epidemic threshold." Most of the victims were elderly or chronically ill.

was the strength of real final sales. That indicated a strong underlying demand for the goods of the nation's industries, and should aid further production growth in the first half of this new year.

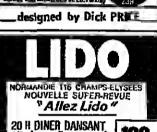

There were other areas of the U.S. economy that ended 1977 on a high plane. The most significant were December's 8per-cent surge in new housing activity to an annual rate of 2,295,000 units, which was the highest in nearly five years, and the strong 1.1-per-cent gain in personal income, which provides a solid base for further consumer spending in support of the total economy.

Even though there is some skepticism over the seasonal adjustment formula in the latest employment and unemployment statistics, it is clear that the nation made notable progress on that front also during 1977. As the President noted, some four million new jobs were added to the economy last year and 1 million persons left the unemploy-

STORMY WEATHER: CROSSLIGHTS ON THE NINETEEN THIRTIES An Informal Social History of the United States,

1929-1941

By J. C. Furnas. Putnam's. 669 pp. 515.

Reviewed by Robert Kirsch

THE raw material of history is the gathered experience of countless individuals in a time and place. The general historian can select impressions to support most any thesis; the social historian can make you believe lt.

J.C. Furnes has taken a penetrating look at the detail of life in the United States between the great Depression and the bombing of Pearl Harbor and has written an incisive and crowded series of interlocking essays on virtually every aspect of the period, from the arts and the media through architecture and industry to fads, fashions and

The dozen years, filtered through Furnas's gathering and interpretation, might not be recognizable to any number of people who lived through the time. It depends on their age, status, region and particular circumstance. I was a boy when the Depression struck and my impressions, for what they are worth, differ markedly from some of the contemporary and retrospective reports in these pages. Yet, without endorsing everything Furnas has written, I feel he makes a persuasive case for the complexity of the American experience in that period.

Certainly, it is too complex to be subsumed under the convenient consensus of some of its major events. These are cliches and banalities which Furnas suggests blur the whole nature of the 30s. He claims that "with both ears and one eye shut, one can see the early 1930s as an admirably dynamic period." There is evidence enough for this in the yeastiness, the excitement of the decade—and Furnas, in his strongest pieces, shows how many of the roots of postwer change in technology, mass communication. social institutions, were stread; growing-but he tends to neglect what might be called the funda. mental perception of the 30s by most of the people who lived through them.

True they were ingenious and optimistic, goaded by poverty or by the prospect which was often enough before them as an exmeplary warning of respectable perple on relief, of wage earners in able to find a job, of professional men let go. Furnas doesn't deny "there was a miserable plenty of cause for suffering, fury, frustration and despair." His chapter on the legends of the Depression entitled The Real Thing Was Rad Enough, is sufficient to show that he is not taking the sulfering lightly though occasionally seems a bit insulated by statistics).

Among the grisly fictions, as on calls them, the staple scenes of fiction and film, were the supposed wave of suicides after the crash of '29. Not so, he says. The suicide rate in America begai rising and continued to rise up ward with the big bull marke in the teeth of euphoric prosper ity, and continued to rise during the first three years of the Depression.

Did the United States con colors to revolution? Furnas and not, although he concedes there were those who thought it had and wanted it to as well as those who feared revolution and were relieved when it didn't happen.
The third legend he question is that of the sharp contrast between do - nothing - but - tal

Hoover and government to the rescue FDR." Hoover was called to be seen of it must be added, trusted by modern the rescue of the What this book has to offer

Some of the principal variations of the King's Indian Defense appear to be antipositional in that White quickly obtains an advantage in space in the center and can easily operate on the queenside, usually by opening the QB file, while Black's coun-ternay on the opposite wing is labored and difficult to set up.

However, the thought—chilling for White—is that his king is the target of the black counter-attack, so that whatever superi-ority he achieves on the queen-side could become vacuous if he cannot produce a defense to fend off mate.

An excellent example of what White has to contend with is provided by the game between the United States champion, Walter Browne, and the Spanish master Cabrera from the Las Palmas International Tournament.

Cabrera was the first to get an open file with 14PxP, PxP, but before going ahead with further queen's wing operations, he aimed to secure his king with 15 N-B2 and 17 P-R3, a system promul-gated by the Dutch grandmaster.

For old Yankees like Henrich. Phil Rissuto or DiMaggio it is no contest. There never was another like Joe McCarthy, who steered them to seven championships in eight years.

Yankee-haters called him a push-button manager, implying that the bathoy could have won with those players, bot it has been shown that not even managers as brilliant as Charlie Finley or George Steinbrenner can win with bad ball players. Remembering the richness of his Yankee talent, it is easy to forget McCarthy's first job in the majors. In 1926 he took over the Chicago Cubs, a lastplace elub the coroner had pronounced dead and partly decomposed. In Joe's four years in Wrigley Pield, the Cubs finished fourth, fourth, third and country in Southeast Asia and moved there with his wife and two children. He had his job to occupy him. His wife had her sense of alienation and despair to preoccupy her. Eventually, she tecame an alcoholic and the marrlage dissolved in divorce.

That is not an especially common story but it is an example of the kind of severe family stress that has begun to concern the U.S. Foreign Service.

At a time when American families are widely described as undergoing considerable difficulty, it seems that such families abroad have to endure more than their share of it.

In a report from the Association of American Foreign Service Women IAAFSWI on the rigors of life abroad, one Foreign Service wife questioned whether the life is worth the sacrifices it demands. As she put it: "I am simply forced to ask myself, am I stupid or cruel or both to do this to myself and to my chil-

Two years ago, the Inspector General's Office of the State Department produced an in-house 'action memorandum" entitled "Proposals to Improve the Difficulties of Life in the Foreign Service." In it, a number of "shocks to the system" were noted: Four cases of wife-beating involving Foreign Service families had been reported to a Montgomery Coun-ty, Md., hotline in six weeks; 6 per cent of Foreign Service amployees and dependents had problems with alcohol: the State Department evacuated, on the average, three families a week for reasons of health or failure to adjust."

But aside from the problems of modern living that can affect any family, the Foreign Service family must also deal with the stress that often accompanies geographic mobility, language barriers and the potential physical and emotional isolation produced by inhospitable cultures.

Unlike the overseas military family, which often lives in ao American enclave with on—side medical facilities and a full- support system, the Foreign Service family may find itself at a small post made up of perhaps three Americans, dependent upon local medical facilities. In Peking, for instance, the medical officer is a Foreign Service nurse; in Vien-na, the Foreign Service doctor serves 40 other posts.

The State Department first added a psychiatrist to its medical staff in 1971, when Dr. Frank Johnson was brought in to deal

Grosvenor Empire: 300 Choice Acres

By Sandra Salmans

ONDON (NYT). - Despite punitive death duties, steep income tax rates and shopping sprees by Arab shelkhs, much of the most valuable real estate in this city belongs, as it has for 300 years, to a single English family. Probably the wealthlest private landlord in Britain, the Grosvenor family holds title to the 300 choice acres in central London that make up Mayfair and Belgravia. He proper-ties number no fewer than 30 foreign embassies, including the inge U.S. Embassy on Gros-venor Square, as well as street after elegant street of gracious, white and cream-colored Georgian and Regency private resi-

The family elso owns a hunting lodge in Scotland, a country home in Northern Ireland, a dairy farm in England, a 10,000acre sheep station in Australia, and other business properties in Britain, Canada and the United States.

The Grosvenors refuse to Imencial information on the estate and, given the complexities of real estate, it is impossible to estimate its total worth. But theoretically, at least, the Grosvenor fortune could be conservatively estimated at no less than $500 million.

But in his will the doke, At a time when stately homes such as Mentmore have gone on the auction block to pay death duties, the Grosvenhave survived-and prospered-through shrewd tax maneuvers and sound investments. When the second Duke of Westminster, the head of the Grosvenor family, died in 1953, the estate had to sell much of middle-class Pimilco section to cover inheritance taxes of $32 million.

his three male cousins who were in line to inherit. The property went directly to Gerald, Earl of Grosvenor, then only 2 years old. The estate thus remained to one piece and, with Lord Grosvenor now 26 years old, death destes will probably not be paid for several more de-

The rule of primogeniture is one of the reasons for the survival of the Grosvenors," Lord Grosvenor said recently. The earl, who breezily described himself as heir to the whole lot," admitted that for his two sisters, "It's a tough rule. There's no such thing as equal opportunity in primogeniture." The income earned by the Grosvenor trust is distributed among the 15 members of the Grosvenor family, including the earl's family, the fifth Duke of Westminster, as well as some charities. Lord Grosvenor, who determines the distribution, stated that the trust income was "comfortable."

Such efforts at tax minimisstion are not unique among England's landed gentry. The nourished, according to Jammy James, its gental executive trustee, is that "we work a bit harder. If you just sit still, you can only go backwards."

Bits of Honolulu

From his specious Mayfair office, ornstely decorated with cheruhe ("They get a bit much by 5 p.m.," he confessed), Mr. James oversees a burgeoning real estate empire. The trust has bought office buildings in Sydney and Melbourne and a 1,200-acre industrial island off Vancouver, British Columbia. In Hawaii, the trust has purchased bits of downtown Honohulu, and is putting up a hotel-condominium complex on the island of Maul. Recently, it moved into California, opening an investment office in Sen Francisco. "Very civilized little spots, those are," observed Lord investments regularly.

The heart of the estate, however, remains Maylair and Belgravia, which were marsh and meadow land when Mary Davies brought them as a dowry to Sir Thomas Grosvenor 300 years ago. Mary Davies later went mad but the Grosvenors kept wits and looked to the Under English real-estate law that applies even today, the landlord, or freeholder. plot of ground. The lessee paid for the construction of a building and its upkeep, as well as any property taxes during the contractual period—historically, 99 years. At the end of that time, both land and building reverted to the freeholder, who could then sell the lessehold at an even handsomer price, for another 99 years.

In this way, the Grosvenors acquired their fabulous estate. Recent changes in the law have forced the family to sell off a handful of its freeholds to individuals; other properties have been spun off to the British government and to churches. A cherished few buildings, such as Claridge's, "alipped through the net," Mr. James said ruefully. The hotel still bears the Grosvenor family

Still, of the 4,500 units in Mayfair and Beigravis, all but 200 are owned by the Grosvenors. Leases for the properties are rolled over regularly for an additional 30 or so years. Each time that happens, the trust receives an average of $100,000 to $200,000 in revenue.

Offered a Swap

Among the present lease-holders is the U.S. Embassy, the only American Embas building to the world that the U.S. government does not own. When the United States tried to buy the freehold to a side of Grosvenor Square after World War II, the Grosvenors for "their" 12,000 seres in Fiorida, confiscated during the Revolutionary War. That land is probably part of Cape Canaveral now-and so, in the end, the embassy settled for a long-Luckily, the Grosvenors have a tradition of being good landcaretakers and porters in Lon-don, as well as traffic wardens for the private mews and gardeners to weed Belgrave Square and the other private parks. Lord Grosvenor personally strolls through the estate, noticing whether the stucco on the 200-year-old houses needs a fresh coat of paint. The estate has veto power over the design of any new building on its land, and over such embellishments as roof gardens, balconies and commercial signs. Television aerials are hidden but, sighed Mr. James, "the embassy build-are most unsightly, and we can't do a thing about them." and bustling Oxford Street is a modest, six-story building that is carriously out of place among the estate's luxurious town houses. Built 100 years ago by a charitable trust, Clarendon Flats today houses mainly old-age pensioners who pay as little as $1.90 a week in rent. "You might say we have a somewhat feudal Robin Hood approach," said Mr. James, "We like to her from the post office. The Grosvenors throw open their London town house at 100 Baton Square and their Cheshire homes each Christmas to the estate's 400 workers in England, Such benevolence seems peculiarly archaic in England these days.

In his office, Lord Grosvenor works under the painted gaze century," the earl admitted "but we're proud of what we've got and we want to keep it.

He gave George Burns his first acting brook But for Jessel-a foreignpolicy hewk-the plum was to have been an ambassadorship; something to let him bow out with dignity and a title more official than toastmaster general of the United States, as Harry S Truman had called him.

"I hoped Nixon would appoint me," he said in his dressing room at the Silver Slipper. He would have liked to have occupied the U.S. Embassy in Seoul; he brags about having done some public relations work for Tongsun Park, the same way he boasts about his support of the U.S. involvement in Vietnam-a war that brought him a Purple Heart when, while flying to an appearance. his helicopter was shot down.

"Sure I'm bitter about Vietnem about not winning," he said.
"When you're connected with a host war, you get a lot of dust on your uniform."

A Washington acquaintance arranged the burlesque appearance in Washington, getting Jessel $5,000 a week. He opened on New Year's Eve to an audience of about 30-mostly friends of the management—noting that 25 years ago he spent New Year's Eve in the White House, several blocks west. He sang a couple of songs and told ribald jokes that he said could only be whispered to friends 20 years ago.

At the end of his first show, Jessel bowed to an ovation and walked to his dressing room, checking the watch that was given to him by Gen. Omar Bradley and learning on the cane sent to him by Truman.

"It was a gentle crowd. I feel better," he said. "I think they were standing once there, weren't
